

MAUI TWENTY YEARS AGO

(From Maui News, December 15, 1900)

The December term of the Circuit Court closed on Thursday.

Pioneer Mill has started its season's grind and Paia will "smoke up" on Monday.

T. B. Lyons has received his appointment as post-master of Wailuku.

In one respect the term of the circuit court which has just closed its historical in that it marks the initiation of the grand jury system on Maui. Five true bills were found and two cases were thrown out by the inquisitors. Of the five indicted three of the accused entered pleas of guilty.

Dr. Rossi, representing the Italian government is inspecting the plantations of Maui this week.

The road between Wailuku and Lahaina has been repaired sufficiently to make travel on wheels fairly comfortable.

Election of officers of Company I, National Guard of Hawaii has been postponed to December 20.

Telegraph News

Canadian politics are now divided on race lines between the British and the French.

Bids have been invited for guns which will cost the United States Government more than $7,000,000.

Cuban medical officers declare that yellow fever is spread by bites of mosquitoes.

No more cigarettes can be sold in Iowa.

The first bill introduced in congress after the opening this month was for the apportionment of congress under the last census. It provides for an increase in membership from 357 to 365.

The first lot of Porto Rican laborers bound for Hawaii reached New Orleans, December 1 and were permitted to land from the steamship Arcadia as United States citizens, thus establishing the vexed question as to their national status. They number 114 and filled two tourist cars on the train that takes them from New Orleans to San Francisco whence they will take steamer to Hawaii.

School Notes

Here is a brief composition written out of school hours by Hitoshi Musoka, the Halehaku school boy who came from Japan, knowing no English only two and a half years ago. He gives his composition the title "Last Night" and it shows quite a vein of poetry running through his nature though his poetic thoughts are expressed in prose.

Last night I took the chair out and I sat down to see the sky. The moon was looking down on me with smooth and round, bald head. I could hear the waves dashing on the shore and the cows cried, "moo, moo." The frogs were crying sweetly because the autumn had come. The wind hit against the trees and made some strange voices.

Far, far away I could see the Dipper and some others stars. Everytime when I look at the North star I think about boys and girls who lives in the cold North.

OTHERS START SAVINGS.

Editor Maui News:

Dear Sir: I think you would like to know what we have done at our school lately.

On Arbor Day we planted about one hundred trees. We were quite pleased with the good rain the last week or so for it has helped the plants very much.

Now I will tell you about our Thanksgiving exercises. We heard a good many stories that day and songs were sung by the different grades. The teachers told us stories about "The First Thanksgiving" and about the big feast the Pilgrims had, and when we were finished, we all felt like having a big feast too and asking our friends to come also.

Mr. Trask from the Bank of Maui, also gave us a talk about starting a bank account. He said that if we get in the habit of saving now while we are young that we will have a good start in life. About one hundred and forty children have started their bank accounts.

After the talk a good many of us made up our minds to start a savings account and have saved two or three dollars already.

This is all I will tell you now. Later I will tell you about our Christmas exercises which we expect to have.

Yours truly,

YOSHIKO MASAKI.

Brushed From Car—Three passengers standing on the running board of a street car on Nuuanu street, Honolulu, were brushed from the car by an automobile which ran to the curb but still was unable to avoid the accident.

THEATERS

Dorothy Gish

Dorothy Gish, in what is considered her richest comedy, "Little Miss Rebellion." The part of the grand duchess is ideal for her and she again demonstrates why she is called the most original actress on the screen. Her gestures and mannerisms are always a delight to watch. As the grand duchess she experiences various trials but her sense of humor comes to the rescue and saves her from despair. The picture is a rare comedy and is thoroughly enjoyable. So, "Little Miss Rebellion" and chase away the blues.

William Russell

A powerful story is promised in a new William Fox production, "Sacred Silence," starring William Russell. Advance reports indicate a photoplay that is unusually dramatic, dealing as it does with social life in the exclusive army set—a phase of life which is the more fascinating because so little is known of it by the average layman. The action revolves around an unscrupulous woman and the chaos she brings into the lives of three men, fellow officers, who are closely united by bonds of friendship. The story offers exceptional situations and with Mr. Russell as the star should find high favor even with the most discriminating of photoplay audiences.

Bessie Love

The uses of psychology in ordinary everyday situations are revealed interestingly in the Vitaphone picture, "A Fighting Colleen," with Bessie Love in the title role.

Miss Love, in the character of "Pugy" Malone, the terror of Cobblestone alley, finds it necessary to work psychology many times in her young life. She is a poor little creature who has to sell newspapers on a street corner to help maintain the dingy, cell-like tenement home of her widowed mother and herself.

It comes to pass that "Pugy's" mother falls ill and must be supplied with medicine, fruit and ice. "Pugy" through rare demonstration of wits obtains the medicine and a damaged orange and ice. On her way home she sees Tillie O'Higgins coming down the street with a bunch of flowers, at her bosom. It occurs to "Pugy" that those flowers would do a world of good in the sick room.

"Pugy" calls psychology into play. She tells Tillie that the flowers don't match her dress. Tillie moves on disdainfully but at the turn of the corner she throws the bouquet away. "Pugy" following stealthily, salvages the bouquet.

Tom Moore

Tom Moore in "Heartsease," in which he has a delightfully romantic role.

The story presents him in love with a girl who, through a misunderstanding, accepts the proposals of another. Involved in the structure of the plot is the theft of the young man's opera by the fiancée of the girl. When the opera is stolen, the thief, a nobleman, has instructed his henchman to intimidate the composer. The henchman succeeded so well that his assault upon the musician resulted in the latter's losing his memory from a blow on the head.

Some time later the musician attended the first performance of the nobleman's new opera. Here the musician discovered that the music was his own and gradually his memory began to return. In another part of the house the girl of his dreams was beginning to realize that the opera performed was the stolen masterpiece of her discarded but not forgotten lover.—Adv.
